had made a Foundation Course an integral part of all degree courses. All the Universities in the Council had introduced a common foundation course in Arts, Science and Commerce. To conform to this national frame, an also made provision for a foundation course in an degree programme. In the meantime, the University was asked by the UGC for the introduction of Environmental Science as a compulsory subject of one hundred marks in college education for all streams. The UGC also forwarded a draft syllabus for the purpose. The Academic Council considered the proposal and decided to adopt the draft syllabus on environmental science with some modifications for the Foundation Course. The Council also decided that for an inter-disciplinary course of this nature the University should prepare a text book for the students.

My colleagues have worked hard to prepare the book at a very short notice. The main draft for Our Environment is a contribution of Dr. Abhik Gupta (Reader in Ecology). The sections on 'Economy and Environment' and 'Women and Environment' have been written by Professor P. R. Bhattacharjee (Dean, Social Sciences) and Mrs. Mitra Dey (Lecturer in Zoology, G. C. College) respectively. Professor G. D. Sharma (Dean, Life Sciences) and Professor P. R. Bhattacharjee (Dean, Social Sciences) have gone through and edited the manuscript before publication. The authors and the editors have taken care to make the text appropriate for a common course for the students in all streams. It can be revised and improved upon in subsequent editions. The teaching and examination in Foundation Course shall be limited to what has been provided in this book. The questions in this course shall be of objective types consisting of multiple choices and short questions. The model questions are being prepared and shall be published in a book form by November this year.

Words cannot be adequate to appreciate the hard work of the contributors in this important task. This is the first effort of its kind and a beginning in environmental education in our region. It is time that we should promote environmental education to develop a world population which is well informed about environmental problems and which has the knowledge, skill and motivation to work collectively to improve environmental conditions. Moreover, in this course we have been able to accommodate two requirements of UGC, viz. a foundation course and a compulsory course in environmental science at the first degree level. I am sure that we will get good response from our colleagues in the degree colleges to this course and our collaborative efforts will be rewarding to our students. The contents and presentation can be progressively improved as we gain experience in monitoring the course.
